ENDNOTE A:

Computer Supported Cooperative Work (CSCW) is a highly competitive, archival quality conference. For CSCW2012, the community instituted a Revise and Resubmit step in its evaluation process of papers. The rationale for this was that the acceptance rate was lowering every year (reaching 20%), creating barriers to participation despite a collective body of strong work. The idea was that with good peer reviewing, paper quality could increase even more with a revision cycle, with an increased acceptance rate being a natural and desirable outcome that would then allow the community to further grow.

CSCW2012: For the first year, the conference was able to achieve its goal of high quality papers, higher participation and a higher acceptance rate, with all indicators showing that the quality of work had not been lowered. The acceptance rate this first trial year was 39.5%.

CSCW2013: In the second year of the new process, the acceptance rate dropped to 36%.

CSCW2014: By 2014, the community was again returning to habits that were closer to pre-2012 days, and even though the Revise & Resubmit cycle remained, the acceptance rate dropped to 27%, with some feeling that the quality for conference papers had reached a height not seen before which, on the one hand was good, but on the other might be creating standards that are too stringent for a non-journal venue.

CSCW 2015: In 2015, the practice established in CSCW2014 continued, with a 28% acceptance rate with a Revise and Resubmit cycle. The number of papers submitted to the conference was unprecedented.

CSCW 2017: For 2017, the acceptance rate was 34.5% with a Revise and Resubmit cycle, allowing more papers to advance because of the revision opportunity.
