

Casey Biegelsen recently joined the Leeds School of Business at the University of Colorado Boulder as an Instructor for both the Finance and Real Estate programs.

Her career as an investment banker spans more than 30 years in public and housing finance, and she is a recognized expert in the design of unique structures and the application of derivative products.

Ms. Biegelsen began her career working as an independent consultant, providing custom spreadsheet models and tools for investment banks. After becoming an investment banker, she worked for Lehman Brothers before accepting a position with Barclays Capital as a Director to rebuild client balance sheets after the Financial Crisis of 2007-2008.

Ms. Biegelsen serves on the Board of Directors for a non-profit organization, serving homeless and at-risk women and their families within Colorado. She holds a BA in Mathematics and an MBA, both from the University of Colorado Boulder.